So let's move ahead with this article and see what causes the phone to freeze and how to fix a Frozen Android phone. To Fix a Frozen Android Phone, we recommend this tool: This effective tool can fix Android issues such as boot loop, black screen, bricked Android, etc. in no time. Just follow these 3 easy steps: Download this Android System Repair tool (for PC only) rated Excellent on Trustpilot. Launch the program and select brand, name, model, country/region, and carrier & click Next. Follow the on-screen instructions & wait for repair process to complete. Why Does My Android Phone Get Frozen? Well, when you look at the causes behind the frozen screen on an Android phone there are tons of those that make your phone freeze. Some of them include: Low memory space- Many times when your device doesn't have any storage space then such types of errors are possibly seen. Low RAM- Installing various types of apps can really kill the RAM of your device. In fact, if you do several processes at the same time or several apps run in the background then obviously you can come across the error. Software updates- The preinstalled apps get notifications to update but all the apps are not used though. The apps that you are using should be up to date and leave the other apps that you don't use. Malware infection- When your phone is infected with a harmful virus then it can make you suffer. Viruses can take away lots of data from your phone and it stays in the device itself killing every data silently. Because of virus infection, sometimes your phone freezes Antivirus software- Lots of Android users install antivirus programs so that no harmful virus infects it. And it runs in the background to scan the websites to stop infecting the device. This slows down the device and freezes it completely. So, these are some of the common reasons for the Android phone freezing issue. Now it's time to see what is the solutions that can help you to unfreeze Android phones without any issue. Also Read: Fix Samsung Screen Frozen Error Solutions to Fix Android Phone Keeps Freezing Issue If your Android phone is frozen and not responding when you tap on any button or anywhere on the screen, you may need a professional solution to fix this issue. Use the Android Repair Tool. This tool can help you with unfreezing the Android phone. It will also help you fix other Android issues, such as black screen, purple screen, white screen of death, apps that keep crashing, the phone stuck in the boot loop, many more. So, don't let this issue bother you anymore and use this software to fix it within a few seconds. Simply, download this tool on your device, follow the instructions given in the Android Repair Tool user Guide and leave the rest of the work on it. btn img Solution 2: Restart Your Phone When the above methods don't work then restart your device once. Because restarting the phone when any kind of error occurs can really fix the frozen Android phone and allow you to access it safely. Just hold the Sleep/Power button for a few seconds after which you will get the power off button on the screen. Just tap on Power off and wait for some time to switch off your device. After the phone gets switched off completely, now again turn on your device by holding the power button. Solution 3: Force Restart Your Phone When your Android phone freezes entirely without allowing any way to access it then simply restarting might not solve the issue. In this condition, you have to force restart your device. To do this, you have to press the Sleep/Power button along with the Volume up/down button. Hold these buttons until your phone turns black and continue pressing until the phone boots up. This process may differ from device to device, so you should once check the force restart process of your device. In fact, doing force restart does not require any other commands, so do as mentioned and after this, once check whether the problem has been resolved or not. Solution 4: Charge Your Phone Whenever you come across this unexpected situation on your phone, first try to charge your device using the original charger to unfreeze Android phone. Maybe your phone has a low battery and that's why it is not turning on. So, plugging your device once can help you better to understand the actual problem. After plugging, if your phone still gives no indication of any charging, you can try another charger. If the problem continues then you should move to the next solution. Reinsert the Battery on Device If your Android phone is frozen and you are unable to do anything on it then remove the battery from your phone if the battery is removable. This is yet another best way to unfreeze your Android phone. You have to remove the battery for a few seconds and again put it back on your phone properly and now switch on your phone pressing the power button. Removing the battery will disable every application and can make your phone work as before. Solution 6: Force Stop the Frozen App There might be several apps on your phone that you use on daily basis. But there are also a few apps that do not work properly and are stuck in the background. Pressing the Home button might make you think that it has stopped but actually, it's still running in the background. So it's better to close the app that is creating problems on your phone. It's better to force stop the app and to do this, go to the Settings menu. After that, go to Apps and there you have to select the app that is creating a problem. Select one and click on "Force Stop" to close the app completely. Go to Settings > Apps > select the app > click on Force stop > at last, confirm it. Solution 7: Uninstall the Problematic Apps to Unfreeze Android Phone If you have recently downloaded an app on your phone and your Android phone is freezing every time you try to open the app, you better remove that app from your device. It is because such buggy apps will not only ruin your experience but may affect the whole device system and may also turn up a serious issue. So, to uninstall the problematic app from your Android device, follow these steps: Open the phone Settings app. Go to the Apps. Tap on the problematic app to open the App Info page. Now, click on the Uninstall button. After removing the app, restart your phone. Solution 8: Free Up Storage Space on Your Android Smartphone One of the biggest reasons why an Android phone is frozen is running out of internal storage space. An Android phone needs sufficient storage space to load the apps and store the temporary files on the system. And when it lacks memory space, the device starts freezing and crashing. To keep the Android phone running expectedly, you must have 500MB to 1GB free internal storage space on the device. If you have less than this space left on the device, then no wonder why you are facing this issue. To check the available storage space on your Android phone, follow these steps: Open the Settings app of your Android phone. Go to the About Phone. Tap on the Storage. Here, you can see the total and available storage space on your Android phone. If it is less than 1GB, you need to do some cleanup work. Well, there are several ways to free up the internal storage space on your Android phone. Expand the memory space by adding the external SD card Remove the unused and unnecessary files and apps on your phone Move some of the apps and media files to the SD card Clear the cache and data of the apps Wipe cache partition You can also use the third-party cleaner apps to remove the junk and temporary files on your Android device If you are still facing storage issues, read our blog on Fix insufficient storage space available error on Android to resolve this issue. Solution 9: Stop Apps Running in the Background Your Android phone may also freeze when there are not enough resources available on the device. If you have too many apps and processes running in the background, then it will consume a lot of memory space and other resources on the phone. So, it is suggested to close all the background apps and services to unfreeze Android phone. Open the Recent panel. Close all the apps opened on your phone. Alternatively, you can also shut down apps running in the background from device Settings: First, enable the Developer Mode on your Android phone. Go to the Settings. Tap on Additional Settings. Click on the Developer options. Go to the Running Services option. Select the app you want to shut down and tap on it. Click on the Stop button. Solution 10: Update Your Android Phone to Unfreeze Android Phone Keeping your phone updated is essential for avoiding any performance issue, including the Android phone keeps freezing problem. With running the outdated OS, you miss the crucial patches, and it may also bring compatibility issues with the app. So, updating the Android OS is also one of the potential solutions to fix an Android device that freezes or won't respond. For that: Go to the Settings > About Phone. Tap on the System Update. Let it check for new updates. If there is an update available for your phone, tap the Download Update button. Wait for the updating process to be finished, and then restart your phone. Now, check if the issue got resolved or not. Along with this, ensure all the apps are updated. For this, open the Google Play Store > click on the profile icon > tap on the Manage Apps & Devices > Updates Available > tap on the Update All button. This way, all of the apps will get updated at once. Solution 11: Factory Reset Your Device As already mentioned, when everything fails to fix the Android phone screen freezing problem, then doing a factory reset really troubleshoots the issue. But do remember that the factory reset process deletes entire data from the device. So it's important to backup all your data in a safe place before you move forward. Now follow the steps below to do a factory reset First, switch off your device Hold the Power and Volume Down buttons to get into Recovery mode For Samsung, hold the Power + Power Up + Home button Now use the Volume Down button to navigate Recovery mode and press the Power button to select There you have to choose to Wipe data/factory reset and then press Power After that select Yes to confirm Soon your phone will be rebooted and you will get your phone as a new one. That's it, now the problem has been solved. But what to do if you have not backed up your data and doing factory reset has wiped away everything? Don't worry, there are ways to get them back.
